base; increased community commitment to the future of an area, and increased support for the Planning Service. This enables communities to have a better understanding of how planning policies are developed and how decisions are made.

Wandsworth's Corporate Approach

2.3 Corporately the Council takes account of the key principles of consultation, which are best summarised in what is termed 'the Gunning Principles'. These are:

- Consultation should be undertaken when proposals are still at a formative stage - Public bodies need to have an open mind during a consultation and not have already made the decision, but have some ideas about the proposals.
- Consultations should give sufficient reasons for any proposal to permit 'intelligent consideration'. People involved in the consultation need to have enough information to make an intelligent choice and input into the process.
- Adequate time must be given for consideration and response.
- Responses must be conscientiously taken into account.
- The degree of specificity regarding the consultation should be influenced by those who are being consulted.
- The demands of fairness are likely to be higher when the consultation relates to a decision which is likely to deprive someone of an existing benefit.
