Note

The survey received 211 submissions in total. However, our reporting uses a fair, per-household method, which identifies duplicate addresses and ensures each household counts equally. Where more than one response was submitted from the same address, each individual response is weighted so that the household contributes a single overall outcome when results are summarised. As a result, the analysis is presented using 168 unique households/addresses, rather than 211 raw submissions. This is why the “total” shown in the breakdown is 168: it reflects household-equivalent responses after address de-duplication and weighting, not the total number of submissions received.
